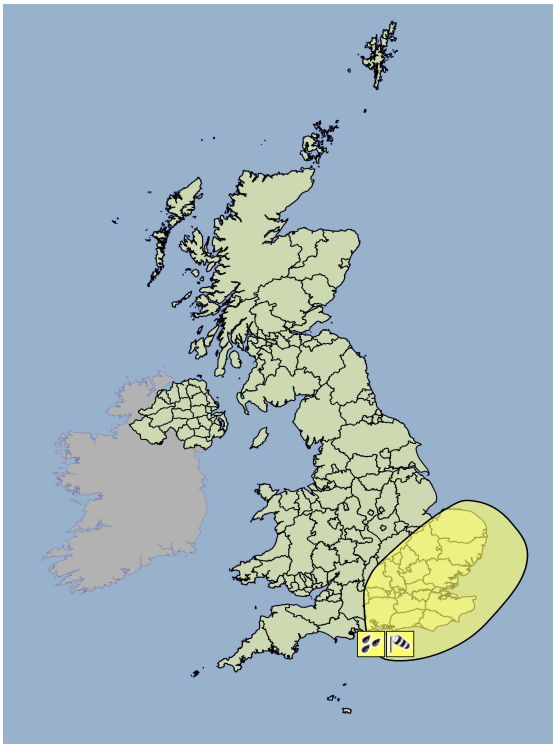
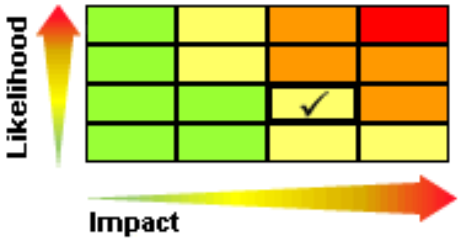
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of low pressure will run northeastwards close to southern England today (Friday), deepening into quite an intense feature for the time of year, before clearing to the east early on Saturday.

While there remain some uncertainties in the track and intensity of this low pressure system, there is now an increased probability of a developed feature bringing disruptive rain and wind, particularly across the east of the area. More than 30 mm is expected quite widely but with the likelihood now that some areas could well see more than 70 mm of rain. The combination of factors brings the risk of disruption to outdoor activities and heavy holiday traffic.

This warning may still be updated later today, as further information becomes available.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain and Wind

Valid from 12:00 on Fri, 24th Jul 2015 until 11:00 on Sat, 25th Jul 2015

Areas of rain, often heavy, and strengthening winds will cross much of southern England today (Friday), persisting overnight in the east, before clearing on Saturday morning.

This is an update of yesterday's warning, advising of an increased likelihood of localised flooding, especially across southeast England and East Anglia, where the warning may yet be escalated to Amber. These areas are also most likely to be affected by northerly gales, with winds gusting to 45 mph inland and around 55 mph along coasts.

The public should be aware of the potential for disruption, particularly affecting those travelling or engaged in outdoor holiday activities.
